Posts navigation About the author admin Do you like self-hosted or hosted e-mail solutions? Do you have to pay $20 a month to do it? Then maybe you should switch to MailGun or SendGrid. Mailgun is a hosted solution that I use and quite happy with. This is a nice article, nice info, but one thing that should be added to this article, maybe, and it's just my opinion, that is you should be able to monitor services which are on other servers. Something like github webhook, where you have the github status page in the tray icon, and if github goes down, that's great, but also if it's down on your own servers, ( or someone else's servers ), then when you have that sort of a service going down, if the service is that important, maybe it's not the end of the world. I think, it would be a great tool. ... but maybe they already are doing it. I'm glad that the article was useful. BTW. thanks for sharing this at 'Gits' :)
pegger It would be nice to be able to exclude a service. Dropbox has been completely unresponsive for me for Installation instructions: Keyboard Macro Recorders does not require installation or setup. It requires no additional software and can be used on any Windows or Mac computer. Is there any way to record web sites so that I don't have to record over and over again? I'm not sure, but you might be able to add one of the popular web-based video recording apps to your Chrome browser, and use it as a generic video recording app. You'd have to experiment to see if it works, but I suspect it may. For example, I use the Puffin free video recording app. It's built into Chrome, so if you use Chrome, go to settings, then advanced and then content settings, then click the arrow next to video recording. Then click on the Puffin icon to connect it to your Chrome browser. This should allow you to record the site. Another option is to use one of the other free video recording apps available. I use OBS Studio, but it's a little more involved. You have to download the app, set up a file, and then record. Still another option is to use a desktop video recording program. I use the $100 30-day trial version of CyberLink PowerDirector Studio. It's pretty good, but it's not free. All free apps record 1080p HD video, which is great. But I do use the paid version, because I have a Mac with a Full HD display and I want it to look good. I'm currently using the Windows version of Lightworks. It's free, but it's not open source. It also doesn't have a Mac version. But it 1d6a3396d6
